How to implement awareness days

Physical health awareness days

Check out the health awareness days on this calendar – they create great reasons to start conversations and signpost support.

Understanding your own colleagues' unique concerns goes a long way towards building a healthy and happy workplace culture.

Things to consider:

- If your workforce includes a lot of women in their 40s and 50s, consider a dedicated menopause hub or network to give year-round support
- If appropriate to your workplace demographic, signpost awareness of conditions that tend to impact men, including prostate cancer, heart disease, suicide and depression, diabetes, liver disease and alcohol problems
- Introduce specific strategies for conditions or issues that are likely to affect your teams

Mental health awareness days

Use these days as prompts to check in with your employees and get teams talking to each other, to make health and wellbeing a top priority.

- Making mental health part of everyday conversations can encourage openness. Add mental health conversations to regular reviews, planning meetings and appraisals
- Invest in training and start a mental health first aider scheme if you don't have one already – creating informed points of contact for employees seeking support
- If you want to offer support but don't know how to, remember, there is guidance available online and through professional healthcare providers
- Everyone in an organisation should know the signs of declining mental health. Leaders and managers in particular should be empowered to intervene
